

Finding e-journals

This link takes you to the search box to find out if a specific magazine or journal is available in full text online.

You may search for a single word in a title, or an exact title. For example, a search for “Business” returns over 500 results with the word “Business” somewhere in the title (see the example below).

- Clicking on the title of the journal will take you to a list of the articles available, or to a screen that will allow you to browse through various issues of the journal.
- Clicking on the underlined database title will take you to that database, ready for a search in that journal.
- You’ll want to take note of the availability information—the example below has full text available in all of the databases listed, and in every case, it’s only available for the time period ending with 2002.

- Clicking on the title of the journal brings you to a list of the issues.
- Clicking on the resource (EBSCOhost PsycARTICLES) will take you to the database where you can search for articles.

What’s going on with these categories at the end of the entries?

The categories contain lists of journals related to that subject. You can click on one of the categories from your list of search results or you can browse the lists of categories.

To browse the category lists, return to the Journal Locator screen, but click on the tab labeled “Category.” The screen below displays some of the subdivisions included in “Health Sciences.” The number in parentheses is the total number of journals included in that subdivision.

Use this database to find out if a specific magazine or journal is available online.
